

Universal Credit – action taken, more to do

By Graham Whitham

Last week the new Secretary of State for Work and Pensions Amber Rudd MP acknowledged that key ways in which Universal Credit operates and functions need to be addressed. The first important announcement was that the two-child limit for Universal Credit payments will not apply to children born before April 2017. Whilst this is a welcome change, it still leaves the two-child limit in place for children born after that date, hurting families with more than two children who are already at greater risk of poverty. Many campaigners are rightly calling for the policy to be abolished altogether.

One of the major concerns about Universal Credit has been the lack of flexibility around the regularity of payments. Some are concerned that monthly payments cause problems for people used to budgeting on a weekly or fortnightly basis. Amber Rudd is looking at how the system can provide more frequent payments to those people who need them. At GMPA we believe the option of more frequent payments should be made available to everyone in receipt of Universal Credit. That way people will be able to choose the option that best meets their budgeting needs and habits.

Other announcements included looking at making it easier for families to manage childcare costs. Action is needed to reduce the complexity of accessing support for childcare and to support parents to meet upfront childcare costs when moving into work. The migration from the legacy benefits system to Universal Credit has placed a huge burden on the government and recipients of support. Amber Rudd said she will look at the migration of people onto Universal Credit to minimise some of the problems this causes for individuals and their families. The ideal would be an automatic migration of people from the legacy system to Universal Credit (rather than having to put in a new claim for support), but we are yet to see an indication from the Government that they will follow this course of action.

The announcements are welcome but tentative steps towards addressing some of the concerning elements of Universal Credit. In Greater Manchester, many individuals and organisations are fully aware of the challenges created by the implementation and operation of this new social security system. At GMPA we are working with others to understand what can be done locally to improve the way the social security system operates. Please get in touch if you would like to discuss this further.

Understanding poverty measurement, definitions and data – GMPA training course

Would understanding how poverty in the UK is defined and measured help you and your organisation in the work that you do? Do you need to identify robust sources of data to support your fundraising bids? Are you regularly challenged about the nature and scale of poverty in the UK and find the myriad of information about poverty hard to navigate?

GMPA's 'Understanding poverty measurement, definitions and data' course is designed to support organisations facing these challenges. The course was fully booked when we ran it in September so we've added two new dates – March 7th and June 5th

Feedback from the September date included: "Great work – learnt loads" "A complex and in-depth subject was covered in an interesting and informative manner" "Good balance of presentation and group discussion".

Please book now to secure your place on one of the two dates. By the end of this one-day course participants will have developed an understanding of what key poverty data-sets tell us, how best to access data sources and how to use this knowledge to support the work that they do. You can download a full course overview and find out more information here

Food Poverty Action Plan for Greater Manchester Launch Event on Monday March 4th 2019

Where: Methodist Central Hall, Central Hall, Oldham Street, Manchester, M1 1JQ

How to book: Places are limited, so please book for free using this link

Thanks to those who have already been signing up after seeing the "Save the Date" in the last newsletter of 2018. We can now confirm the venue as Methodist Central Hall, the same place where we launched the Alliance itself just eight months ago, and have also included a draft agenda for the event – all details are now on the booking form so please follow this link to find out more and to book as we celebrate how far we've come in co-producing this plan, and look at how we can put it into action together.

Feeding the City: Greater Manchester Saturday January 19th, 2019

The Food Poverty Action Plan for Greater Manchester will propose many actions for businesses seeking to benefit and improve access to good food in their local communities, so it is great timing to be able to share this opportunity.

Impact Hub are putting on a free workshop to help you develop ideas for sustainable food businesses to benefit your local community. Funding, training and advice will be available for new businesses through the Feeding the City program, and this workshop will help you to develop your ideas, ready to apply for this funding - please note that the deadline for funding applications following the workshop is Sunday January 27th, 2019.

When: 1:30pm - 5pm, Saturday January 19th 2019

Where: Bridge 5 Mill, 22A Beswick Street, Manchester, M4 7HR

How to book: Places are limited, so please book for free using this link

*Our city region is growing and we're struggling to feed ourselves sustainably. We want to support you to make change! What food problems would you like to solve for your community?
Do you play with the idea of starting a social business, or already have an idea in mind?*

Feeding the City is a fully funded 12 month programme that will support sustainable food start-ups across all of the UK. Successful applicants will receive bursaries, and have access to business and food expert advice and training throughout 2019. At this Idea-Generating Workshop you will be supported to develop an idea for your own social business, get to know others working in similar areas and have a chance to learn more about Feeding the City. Using concrete tools, you will be helped to think through important elements of your idea in a structured way and to identify blind spots. Furthermore, you will receive valuable feedback and also learn which criteria are important in the funding application. Even those who have no concrete or only a vague idea are welcome.

Please note, any queries about the Feeding the City program should be directed to Impact Hub, while you can find out more about the Greater Manchester workshop through the booking form.
